The monasteries of the congregation follow the monastic way of life as described by St. Benedict of Nursia in his Rule of St. Benedict of the sixth century. The congregation is one of the 19 congregations of the Benedictine confederation and includes 25 monasteries; 19 are autonomous monasteries and 6 are a priori dependent located in 15 of the United States, Puerto Rico, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Mexico and Taiwan. [1]2 History In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a general secularization and suppression of monasteries throughout Europe. As one historian observed, "in 1810 fewer than thirty of the 1500 or so European Benedictine monasteries that existed in the previous century remained. "[3] Slowly, there is a Benedictine revival which has seen old monasteries refounded, new monasteries founded, and a missionary impulse which has begun to spread monasticism throughout the world. The autonomous monasteries began to unite together with collaborative efforts that would see the creation of congregations such as the Congregation of the French Solesmi in 1837, the Beuronese Congregation in 1868, the Subiaco Congregation in 1872, and the Switzerland-American in 1881. It was in the midst of this awakening that Boniface Wimmer, O.S.B., fondatore delláAbbazia di San Vincenzo a Latrobe, Pennsylvania, creÁ² la congregazione Americano-Cassinese.[4] Papa Pio IX eresse la congregazione con il suo decreto (Inter ceteras) il 24 agosto 1855, ponendola sotto il patrocinio dei Santi Angeli Custodi[1].
